Building Solidarity and Changing Practices through Teacher Action Research: A Case Study

“It is brutally clear that current policies are not interested in sustaining the languages and cultures of longstanding and newcomer communities of color in the United States.”

“One always has the moral obligation to change a cultural model into a primary theory when there is reason to believe that the cultural model advantages oneself or one’s group over other people or other groups.”

“In participatory research, groups of people come together to grapple with serious social issues that affect them in their daily lives.”

“If teachers are never self-critical, they will become dogmatic, losing their capacity for renewal and growth. If they’re too self-critical they become powerless and timid. Balance and clarity is the key.”