What is the button that says “Is it at Judson?”

Very few of the library’s databases have everything in full-text. If you find an article that is not full-text, you’ll see an [Is it at Judson? button. Click on the button and you’ll be taken to a menu that might have the following options:

- Full text available via – Click on this link to be taken to another database that should have the full-text article.

- We might have this in print, and if we do, we’ll scan this article and e-mail it to you! – The library might have the article in print format. Click the link, fill out your contact information, and the library will scan and e-mail the article to you. You will usually get the article by the next business day.

- Request document via interlibrary loan – The library doesn’t have the article in electronic or print formats. Click the link, fill out your contact information, and the library will request the article from another library. If another library can send the article, you’ll get it at your Judson e-mail account. This process may take 1-2 weeks.
